

Australian Government

Don't know your rights in the workplace? Have your workplace rights been breached?

The Fair Work Ombudsman
(FWO) can help you

All services are free

Get to know the FWO

The FWO is an independent government agency. It helps employers and employees understand their rights and responsibilities under Australian workplace laws. It also works with you to resolve workplace issues.

The FWO helps international students

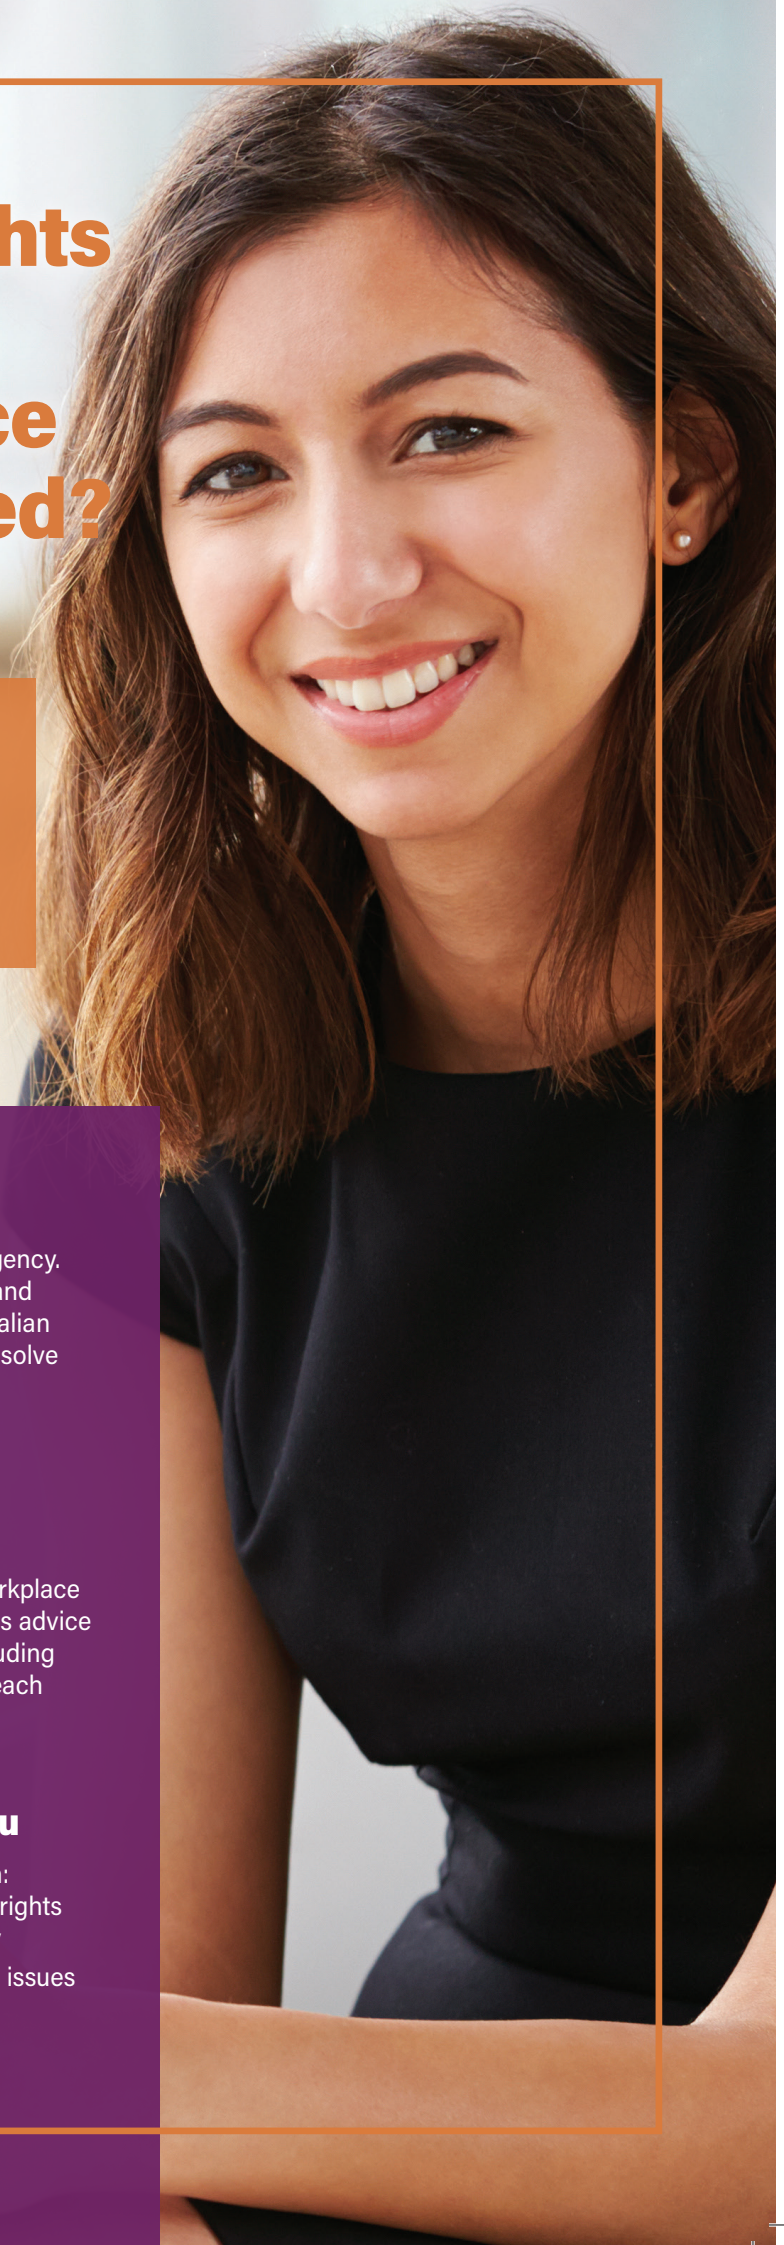

International students have rights in the workplace that deserve to be protected. The FWO gives advice and support to all workers in Australia, including international students. It is safe for you to reach out to the FWO if you need help.

What the FWO can do for you

The FWO is here to listen and to help. It can:

- give you accurate information on your rights in the workplace including rates of pay
- offer advice and support on workplace issues
- help you resolve workplace issues

It's not the FWO's job to check your visa

You can get general advice from the FWO or report issues without giving your name. The FWO can help with issues like underpayment, even if you have breached your visa conditions (like working too many hours).

FWO's services are available in many languages

Language is not a problem when contacting the FWO. You can access their services in different languages – all for free.

Helpful resources and links

RECORD YOUR HOURS

Download the free FWO Record my Hours app to keep track of your working hours. You can also keep other work-related information such as your roster using the app. This app is also available in 18 different languages.
www.fairwork.gov.au/app

MORE INFORMATION

Visit www.fairwork.gov.au/internationalstudents for more information on working in Australia as an international student.

How to contact the FWO

Just call 13 13 94

Scan the QR code to watch a short video on some of your rights while working in Australia. It's available in many languages.